Controversy continues over blood alcohol levels

By Terry Skelton

A new report has found that Canada's blood alcohol limits are among the most lenient in the world.

The Canadian Safety Council (CSC) has released a report stating that Canada's blood alcohol limit of 0.05 is one of the most lenient in the world.

Canada's blood alcohol limit is the International Organization for Standardization (ISO) standard for most countries.

Prof. David Hammond, who teaches law at the University of Ottawa, wrote the report and found that the approach to BAC laws internationally is complex and varied.

The questions the validity of limits, such as the 0.05 limit, are being asked, including (BAC) who are pushing the limit back to be changed from 0.05 to 0.02, based on arguments pointing to foreign regulations.

The report also states that many countries have BAC as low as 0.02, and that legal limit may be too lenient in a criminal matter, as the problem does not just go to the police or criminal justice system.

In response to the report, BAC levels will increase and under the new rules for the program.

Hammond stated that BAC levels are at a point where they are not enough to be considered a crime.

The report also states that the limit is too low, but can mean a lot of trouble for the justice system, which may be too hard on the justice system without having the unimpaired driving limits, which is a minimum standard for driving.

CSC states that increasing the limit to 0.05 is a step in the right direction, but lower limits are a help.

The cost of flying soaring higher

By Sarah McElhinney

In the end, it is all about the dollar. In the United States, the cost of flying has risen sharply in the last few years, and it is expected to continue to rise in the years ahead.

COUNSELLOR'S CORNER: Grief

You can't stop crying. You feel angry. You feel numb. These feelings are all normal reactions to loss in our lives - a reaction we call grief. Grief does not only have to be a result of losing a loved one to death. We grieve any kind of loss: the breakup of a relationship, the loss of good health or even the loss of a dream to reach a certain goal. Although these feelings are natural, it sometimes helps to talk them over with a counsellor as part of the healing process. Writing your thoughts in a journal, reading books about grief, and talking to friends can also help. Most of all, give yourself permission to grieve. Feelings left bottled up will only come out later, delaying the healing process.

If you have a friend who is grieving, don't worry about saying the wrong thing to them. Just be there, be a good listener or remind them how much you care with a card, a hug or some time together.
